be wedded, and fearing also that at the expiration of that time religious prejudices would still exist, John W. Deaslen and Miss Dottie Cousins went to Clayton yesterday afternoon, where they were married by the Reverend B. H. Charles, paster of the Clayton Presbyterian Church. They then reconfess the truth to the bride's mother, and it was not until two hours later that the bride admitted that she was married. Mrs. Deasler was then at the home of her grandmother, Mrs. Caroline Batchellor of No.

The scene at the Batchellor home last night was interesting when it was discov-ered that a descendant of the family had eloped. When informed of the event by a reporter Mrs. Batchelior burst into tears and said she was sorry, as her grand-daughter was only 16 years old, and was a Methodist, while her husband was a Cath olio. This she thought, should have been nt reason for Mrs. Cousins to oppose the match.

While she was talking Mr. and Mrs. Deasler entered and took chairs in an uneasy manner. The bride began to talk about the weather, when her grandmother interrupted and asked if it was true that she had been "Well, I guess it is," she said, "we were married at Clayton this afternoon by a Presbyterian minister. Mamma does not know yet, although we were joking with her at the supper table about marriage."

"Oh, she knew we were engaged," continued the young bride. "We asked her consent last February, and again last April. Both times mamma refused, because she thought I was too young. Last night we were at Forest Park Highlands and con-cluded we could not wait any longer. Tomorrow night we are going to Kansas At Clayton Mrs. Deasler was even more tive. She told the Marriage Liclerk that she was 19 years old, and to a reporter stated that her busband had been boarding at her father's home. Mr. Butler lives at No. 3321 Locust street, while his wife has been heretofore domiciled at No. 1421 North Grand avenue. The bride is 40 years old, while her husband is five years her senior. "The boys had arranged to give me a send-off," said Butler, "which I did not care to have. Consequently I concluded to fool them by coming out here. Yes, this is my first attempt."

SOUGHT ROMANTIC GLAMOUR.

The two couples married by Judge Wilson were Frederick Coleman and Mattie Deever, both living at the corner of Chouteau avenue and Eighteenth street, and Edward Smith and Martha Potthoff of St. Louis. Coleman is a machinist and Smith is a printer. They would not admit that they were elopers, saying that they came to Clayton simply because of the glamour of romance with which it was surrounded.

Spotswood, according to his story, came to St. Louis a year ago with £00 in money and an invention. Drink proved his ruin here. While in a state of intoxication he lost his money and was thrown penniless upon the world. To support himself he began to clerk in different lodging-houses. Two months ago he was eneaved as night Two months ago he was engaged as night clerk for Mrs. Anna Cable, who conducts a lodging-house at Seventh and Pine streets Things progressed smoothly until Sunday, when he quarreied with his employer, in the scuffle which followed, it is said, he stapped her in the face. When Policeman Henry came up Spotswood resisted and was clubbed. Judge Sidener fined him $10 in each case. As no one appeared to pay the fine he was committed to the Workhouse. Spotswood still bears traces of the gentleman.

Spotswood and an only sister, the wife of an Episcopal clergyman in Southern Illinois, are said to be the only survivors of the family.

TORTURING DREAMS MADE HIM CONFESS.

Oliver Temlinson, an Indiana Prisoner, Tells Story of Murder of Frank Lentz.

CHARLES GAINES IMPLICATED.

Latter Admits That His Comrade's Confession, Drawn From Him by Remorse, Is True-Details of the Murder.

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 27.-Nearly maddened by a repetition of the scenes attending the murder of his victim, which came to him in visions as he slept. Oliver Tominson, who has been in the Indiana Reform atory at Jeffersonville since July 5, to save him from mob violence, gave way to the strain this morning and confessed to complicity in the killing of Frank Lentz, a farmer, whose home was four miles south of Bedford, Ind.

In the presence of Charles Gaines, who is ley is detained by public business, I bejointly accused, the story was told by Tomlinson. Gaines, no longer able to conceal demand that I also decline, and thus I rehis emotion, buried his face in his hands, Aropped to his knees, and cried out: "It is all true. I cut his throat."

"On Wednesday, June 27," said Tomlinson "Gaines and I met near my father's home and planned to rob Frank Tyres's apple brandy distillery, one and one-half miles from Frank Lentz's home, which was four miles south of Bedford and just across White River. We procured a number of mpty jugs and bottles and planted them in he woods near Lentz's.

"Saturday night, June 30, at 10 o'clock Gaines and I met at Lentz's gate. Gaines vent into the stable and hitched up Lentz's horse and buggy. I stood guard outside. Gaines came driving out. He was on the ht side of the hi horse to let me climb into the buggy, and I was walking behind the rear wheels, a nan came riding up on a bicycle. I recognized him as Lentz. ordered Lentz to halt. Lentz got off his wheel. He was within fifteen feet of the buggy. I told him to come no nearer. "Lentz approached. Again I warned him Still he pressed toward me. I shot. Lentz reeled to the right, clutching at the gate post. I tried to fire again, but my revolver did not work. Lentz, who had fallen, arose with a stone in his hand, which he hurled

"Then I grabbed Lentz, but he was the stronger and bigger man, and was getting he best of me, when Gaines jumped out of the buggy, seized Lentz by the hair just over the forehead, pulled his head back and cut his throat from car to ear.' At this point in Tomlinson's confession Gaines hissed: "It's a lie!"

Tomlinson pretended not to hear, and re-"Then we got into the buggy, Jrove two miles south and abandoned the rig.
